Compulsory Education Systems (Level 1)

compulsory education 義務教育 system 制度

【資料3】

In the world, there are different compulsory education systems. Each country has its own system.

In Japan, children enter elementary school when they are six years old. They study for six years at elementary school and for three years at junior high school. They have to study for nine years. Many schools have three school terms and three vacations. They have a spring vacation for about two weeks, a summer vacation for about six weeks, and a winter vacation for about two weeks.

In New Zealand, compulsory education starts when children are six years old. However, children can enter elementary school when they are five years old. Many children enter elementary school on the day after their birthdays. So, elementary school does not have an entrance ceremony. The new school year starts in January and it ends in December. School has four school terms and four vacations. Three vacations are two weeks long and one vacation is about five weeks long. Compulsory education ends when students are sixteen years old.

In Brazil, children enter elementary school when children are six years old. As for compulsory education, they study for six years at elementary school and for three years at junior high school. They study only in the morning or only in the afternoon. The new school year starts in February and it ends in December. School has two school terms and two vacations. One is a winter vacation and another is a summer vacation. The winter vacation is three weeks long and the summer vacation is about two months long. Compulsory education ends when students are fourteen years old.

PART 1

Yumi goes to junior high school in Japan and her father works in the USA. When she went to the USA with her mother to see her father, she made friends with an American boy living near her father's house. His name was Tom. When she talked with him, he told her about school in the USA. She found four interesting differences between school in Japan and school in the USA.

First, school in Japan starts in April, but school in the USA starts in September.

Second, students in Japan have their own classrooms to take lessons. Their teachers usually come to their classrooms when students take lessons. However, students in Japan usually move to other classrooms when they take music, fine arts, and homemaking. Students in the USA do not have their own classrooms. They cannot put their books and bags in their classrooms, so they have lockers in the corridors to do so. They often have to move to other classrooms when they take lessons. Each teacher waits for the students in each classroom.

Third, students in Japan go to school by bike, bus, or walk there, but many students in the USA go to school by school bus. It is usually yellow and black.

Fourth, students in Japan eat lunch in their classrooms, but students in the USA do not eat lunch at their classrooms. They eat their lunch in cafeterias.

Yumi was surprised at the differences and really wanted to use a school bus in the USA in the future.
